Prerequisites:
Conditions for passing the subject: During the semester the students take a number of short pop quizzes for a total of 30 points and present the summary of an article published in a professional journal for a maximum of 20 points. The course finishes with a written exam which is worth 50 points. In order to obtain an A the students must achieve at least 90 points, for a B 80 points, for a C 70 points, for a D 60 points, and for an E 50 points.
Results of education: By completing this course the participants will be able to look at special needs learners not as disabled persons but as individuals who are different and who can also achieve success provided their special needs are catered for. The participants will be able to recognize the most frequent symptoms of dyslexia and will be able to organize classroom work in a way that accommodates special needs learners.
Brief syllabus: The course is built on the results of a complex research project conducted for more than a decade. Its aim is to help participants realize that dyslexia as a special need does not exclude successful language learning, it only requires a different teaching approach. During the course the students will find out about the motivation of dyslexic language learners, their learning experiences, and the instructional methods and techniques that can be successfully applied in teaching them. Besides finding out about research conducted in a Slovak and Hungarian context, the participants will also get an insight into the broader international research. When discussing the legal background, the students will find out about possible accommodations, exemptions, as well as how far various language exam centers take account of the needs of dyslexic learners.
